WHAT IS THE PRODUCT?

TYPE: The derivative instrument being a contract for difference (CFD). It allows you to have an indirect exposure to an underlying product/financial instrument (Index). You will not own the underlying product/financial instrument, but you can make gains or suffer losses as a result of price or value movements in relation to the underlying product or financial instrument to which you have the indirect exposure.

OBJECTIVES

The purpose of the product is to allow active short-term investing in an underlying instrument without owning it. The return depends on the purchase and selling price, the size of the position, and any related costs. The product mirrors price movements of the underlying instrument. Profits and losses can be unlimited, but the Company provides Negative Balance Protection, ensuring you cannot lose more than you invested.

When opening a position, you must make a deposit called the initial margin, which is a percentage of the contract's total value. Trading on margin can increase both potential profits and losses.

For example, if you expect GBP/USD to rise, you may buy a CFD (long position) and sell later at a higher price. If you expect GBP to fall, you may sell a CFD (short position) and buy back at a lower price. In both cases, the difference between buy and sell price equals your profit or loss, minus any applicable costs.

Leverage and Margin CFDs are leveraged financial products, meaning you can trade with greater exposure than your deposit. Leverage ratios (e.g., 1:2, 1:5, 1:10, 1:20, 1:30) allow larger trades with a smaller margin. The amount required to open a position on CFD is called initial margin and is expressed as a percentage of the value of the underlying asset. Investors should bear in mind that using leverage may increase their potential profits and/or losses.

Intended Retail Investor The product is not intended for every investor. The product is intended for retail investors who understand the principles of derivative instruments and the risks associated with them, actively invests in such instruments and at the same time are aware of investment risks. The investor should become familiar with the applicable regulations, take part in available trainings and become acquainted with the demo version of the trading platform in order to obtain the sufficient knowledge and experience to be able to manage risks of leveraged trading. When trading this instrument, you are responsible for opening and closing your position as well as choosing the size of your position and any risk management tools offered, such as stop loss or take profit.

Term CFDs usually have no maturity date or minimum holding period. They end only when you close the trade or cannot maintain margin requirements.

PERFORMANCE SCENARIO

*Market developments in the future cannot be accurately predicted. The scenarios shown are only an indication of some of the possible outcomes based on recent returns. Actual returns could be lower.

This key information document is not specific to a particular product, but to the category of products CFD on Indices. The table below represents outcomes of profits and losses under various circumstances. In this scenario, we assume you buy a CFD contract on US 500 with a volume of 10 lots (10 units) at a price of $2790.60. This means that your notional exposure to the contract is $27,906 (10 contracts x the price $2790.60). However, keep in mind that you do not need to invest $27,906, assuming that the initial margin is 1:20 you will only have to deposit $1,395 which is 5% of the notional exposure of $27,906. The same pattern applies in the scenario when you wish to sell a CFD contract on US500 with the same volume, price, and leverage.
